Research Notes:

Finner ingen skifter verken på Andreas eller Ingrid.

English: No legal documents found from the "probate court" of those days yet, concerning the legal procedure that was usually initiated when for instance a spouse died. For each of the children, the widow if there was one, and grown up girls who were not married, a male in the extended family was appointed to represent them, and the material values were divided among the family according to strict rules. For instance: If the parents had taken the cost of a wedding for some of the children, it could be decided that the other children should inherit more than those who were married (for whom the parents already had paid the cost of such a wedding reception).
